UM SUMMER SESSION OFFERS
STUDENTS 498 CHOICES

Dr. Walter C. Schwank, coordinator of the summer session at the University of Montana, said students should have no difficulty obtaining classes of their choice during this year's nine-week summer program.

A total of 498 courses and sections in 30 departments and schools are offered during the two half-sessions at the Missoula unit.

Again this year, the education department, with 83 courses and sections listed, leads the list with the largest number of offerings.

The music department offers 59 choices and the health and physical education department, 35.

In addition to normal course offerings for undergraduates and those working for advanced degrees, UM also offers special programs for intensive work in eight academic areas plus five institutes financed by stipends from the National Defense Education Act and the National Science Foundation.

The special programs, consisting of seminars and workshops, are in business administration, education, English, fine arts, health and physical education, home economics, anthropology and speech. The stipend institutes, which will be offered for periods of six, seven and nine weeks, are in the fields of English, library science, biological science and mathematics.

Registrar Leo Smith said new students or summer transient students should apply for admission to the summer session by the first week in June or at least two weeks prior to the first half-session which begins June 19. Students in attendance at the University during spring quarter should notify the registrar of intent to enroll no later than May 25.
